PARTNERSHIPS FOR HEALTH

Connecting local farms and health clinics for well-nourished communities

The background of the image is a close-up photograph of a woven wicker basket filled with fresh vegetables. Several bunches of green onions with long, vibrant green stalks and white bulbous bases are visible. Interspersed among the green onions are several whole garlic bulbs with their characteristic white, papery skins. The basket's woven texture is visible, and the lighting highlights the freshness of the produce.

“This CSA is exposing my kids to all the new and exciting things. When you get a beet that’s this big, it’s pretty exciting. You get a bunch of carrots that are all different colors. You cut into a carrot and you get to talk about it. The more they eat it, the the more they want to. I really think that had I been raised different to think about food in a different manner, my life would have been different.”

“Soup can make such a difference. And to get to share the soup, it’s not just about me, I get to share that the farm produced this vegetable. It didn’t just come from the supermarket. So then I get to share this bigger story about how the farmers impacted our family. The farmers are truly like our family.”
