

Doctoral Students in Aging Travel Awards

Doctoral students are eligible to apply for the Doctoral Students in Aging Travel Awards for the purpose of presenting scholarly work related to research at professional meetings. The amount of each Travel Award will be up to $1,000. Eligibility and requirements follow:

- Doctoral student must be first author and presenting author giving a presentation related to research.
- The travel award must be for the doctoral student's travel (i.e., not for faculty or staff travel).
- Students can submit their application before or after they have submitted an abstract or had it accepted; if submitted before abstract acceptance, the travel award may be "tentatively" granted, pending abstract acceptance.
- Students can submit their applications to the School Heads at any point during the year. If the doctoral student is in the School of Human Development and Family Sciences, the HDFS School Head will make the decision; if the student is in the School of Nutrition and Public Health, the NPH School Head will make the decision, and if the student is in the School of Exercise, Sport, and Health Sciences, the ESHS School Head will make the decision.

In addition, applications will be evaluated based on the following:

- What year students are in their doctoral program
- Is the presentation for a national or international meeting?
- Are presentations peer-reviewed?
- Does the presentation involve other students as co-authors?
- Has the applicant recently received a Travel Award?

To apply, send the application (see following page) to the appropriate School Head via e-mail. The contact emails for each of the School Heads can be found at this website - <https://health.oregonstate.edu/schools>.
