Doctoral Students in Aging Travel Awards

Thanks to a generous donor, PhD students whose scholarly work is related to aging are eligible to apply for the Doctoral Students in Aging Travel Awards. These awards are for the purpose of presenting scholarly work related to aging research at professional meetings. The amount of each Travel Award will be up to $1,000.

Eligibility and requirements follow:

- 1) The research was conducted as a student at Oregon State University;
- 2) The Doctoral Student is the first author and presenter on the paper or poster;
- 3) The abstract has been accepted for presentation;
- 4) The national-level (or international-level) meeting is a recognized conference in the student's discipline;
- 5) A plan exists for publishing the research presented at the meeting in a peer-reviewed journal; and
- 6) The student's Major Professor approves of the plan for publication and agrees to hold the student accountable.

The process for applying for the College of Health Doctoral Students in Aging Travel Awards is:

- 1) Doctoral Student and Major Professor complete the application without signatures;
- 2) Doctoral Student sends an unsigned application, abstract, proof of acceptance, and plan for publishing research presented as a single pdf document to the Associate Dean for Research to review for eligibility;
- 3) If eligible, the application packet will be sent to the Doctoral student, Major Professor, appropriate School Head, and Associate Dean for Research for signatures;
- 4) Once signed, the Associate Dean for Research will email the Doctoral Student and their Major Professor to notify them about the funding status of the application;
- 5) The Doctoral Student will notify the Associate Dean for Research once they've returned from the trip;
- 6) The Associate Dean for Research's office will inform the Doctoral Student of reimbursement procedures;
- 7) Approved funds will be released to the Doctoral Student upon return from the trip and submission of reimbursement forms.
